

I strongly feel that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen the privacy protection afforded by the Indiana Telephone Privacy Law. Indiana's law has certainly improved my home life in that I now very seldom have unwanted interruptions by unwanted and unsolicited telephone calls by telephone sales persons. Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law has been very effective in that it has reduced these unwanted calls from 10 to 20 times a week to less than one a month. I strongly feel that these types of calls are an invasion of my privacy and greatly appreciate the improvements in my own home life as a result of this law. I also feel that this could reduce the preying upon senior citizens if they were encouraged to take advantage of this service. I also believe that people who subscribe to this service would be unreceptive to the telephone solicitors and I therefore do not understand any attempt to lessen the effectiveness of this law.
